What is “Casting the Worldwide Inter-Net” in the Illuminati Agenda?

Sixbert SANGWA • September 08, 2024

The concept of Casting the Worldwide Inter-Net is introduced in the Illuminati agenda as a metaphor for how the internet and digital technologies have been weaponized by the global elite to control and manipulate humanity. While the internet is often celebrated for its potential to connect people and democratize information, it is also a powerful tool used to cast a metaphorical "net" over the world, ensnaring people in systems of surveillance, social engineering, and digital dependency. For Christians, this topic is vital, as it highlights the spiritual dangers of a hyper-connected, digital world that is increasingly used to promote deception, isolation, and moral decay.

The internet, in the hierarchy's perspective, was initially designed and promoted by the elite as a way to create a global surveillance system. What began as a military project known as ARPANET has evolved into a massive, interconnected web of digital devices that monitor nearly every aspect of human life. From smartphones to social media, every action, location, and interaction is tracked, recorded, and analyzed by governments, corporations, and secretive organizations. The internet has become a critical tool for the elite to monitor the behavior of the masses and to identify those who may pose a threat to their control.
This digital surveillance system, facilitated by tech giants such as Google, Facebook, and Amazon, is seen as a modern extension of the traditional surveillance states controlled by totalitarian regimes. However, unlike earlier forms of surveillance, the internet has been integrated into every aspect of daily life, making it nearly impossible for individuals to escape its reach. As people become more reliant on digital technology, they unknowingly submit to the elite's system of control.

From a biblical perspective, the surveillance and control facilitated by the internet mirrors the warnings found in Revelation 13:16-17, where it describes a future time in which no one will be able to buy or sell without the mark of the beast. This prophecy can be seen as a reflection of how the internet and digital systems are increasingly becoming necessary for participation in modern society, yet they come with the price of surrendering privacy and freedom.

Another significant aspect of the Worldwide Inter-Net is its role in social engineering. The internet allows the elite to manipulate public opinion, control narratives, and shape behavior on a global scale. Through social media platforms, news outlets, and algorithms, the elite control what information is promoted, suppressed, or discredited. This level of control enables them to engineer consent for policies, shape cultural norms, and create division among populations by fostering fear, hatred, and misinformation.
The internet is used to polarize societies, keeping people distracted by constant conflicts over politics, identity, and culture. This division prevents people from uniting against their true oppressors—those controlling the systems of power. By keeping the masses focused on superficial issues, the elite are free to pursue their agenda behind the scenes, while public attention is diverted elsewhere.

This strategy of deception and division is consistent with Satan's tactics, as described in John 8:44, where Jesus calls Satan the "father of lies." The manipulation of information and the use of social engineering to spread falsehoods are part of a broader Luciferian agenda to obscure truth and lead people away from God's plan.

The internet has also created a state of digital dependency, in which people are increasingly reliant on technology for nearly every aspect of their lives. From communication and commerce to entertainment and education, the digital world has become an essential part of modern existence. However, this dependency is not without consequences. As people spend more time in the digital realm, they become isolated from the physical world, from real human connections, and, most importantly, from their relationship with God.

Digital platforms, especially social media, are designed to be addictive, keeping users engaged through algorithms that prioritize content that triggers emotional responses. This keeps people constantly distracted, consuming endless streams of entertainment, advertisements, and superficial interactions. This state of distraction prevents people from reflecting on deeper spiritual truths and from engaging in meaningful relationships with others and with God.

The Bible calls believers to live with discernment and to avoid being ensnared by the things of this world. Scripture reminds Christians to "Set your minds on things above, not on earthly things" (Colossians 3:2). In the context of the digital world, this means being aware of how internet addiction and digital dependency can pull us away from a life focused on God's kingdom.

The spiritual implications of the internet and digital technology is also deeper. As people become more immersed in the digital world, their connection to God and creation weakens. The internet, with its constant distractions and superficial content, fosters a culture of instant gratification, materialism, and self-centeredness—all of which are contrary to the teachings of Christ.

Moreover, the rise of virtual realities and artificial intelligence (AI) introduces new levels of deception, blurring the lines between reality and illusion. The creation of "false realities" through virtual worlds can be seen as a modern-day extension of Satan's original deception in the Garden of Eden, where he distorted the truth to lead humanity away from God. The digital world offers a new kind of temptation, one in which people are lured into false worlds that keep them disconnected from the truth of God's creation and plan.
As believers, it is essential to remain grounded in truth and to be aware of the spiritual dangers of the digital age. Ephesians 6:11 urges Christians to "Put on the full armor of God, so that you can take your stand against the devil's schemes". In the context of the internet, this means staying vigilant, discerning, and refusing to be ensnared by the distractions and deceptions of the digital world.

In all, Casting the Worldwide Inter-Net is more than just a technological advancement—it is part of a broader strategy to control, surveil, and manipulate the masses. While the internet offers many benefits, it also poses significant spiritual dangers. For Christians, it is crucial to navigate the digital world with discernment, staying aware of how the internet can be used to promote deception, division, and digital dependency. By remaining grounded in God's truth and focusing on what is eternal, believers can resist the temptations and distractions of the digital age. As Romans 12:2 reminds us, "Do not conform to the pattern of this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind". With this mindset, Christians can escape the Worldwide Inter-Net and live in alignment with God's plan for their lives.
